The New York Journal of Commerce publishes some tables and details, by which it appears that, through the induced of the Temperance Societies, the consumption of architect sparts has greatly decreased in this country within a few years. For example in 1824 the immonst of architect spirits imported into the United States was 5.295.047 gailous, so in 1830 it was but 3.341.219 gallous. Again, the amount of domes, its spirits which passed I fine down the canal in 1825, was 2.501.342 gallous, whereas, in 1841, it was but 4.752.955 gallous. So much for the progress of Temperance: It would be a valuation that the amount of earlier table, could such a one be obtained; to discover the progress in his, in fame and prosperity for the progress in his, in fame and prosperity for twenty or forty years, of one hundred persons, who set not at the beginning as fully temperate with regard to arbitrary spirits, in contrast with the same progress of one hundred others who commenced the words as occasional drankers.
